Creating a Culture for Learning is based on the belief that all schools must create cultures that promote and support professional growth and collaboration. There is simply no other way for educators to move forward in the quest to have more students learn more, more of the time.

It is based on the essential questions:

- What do schools look like when they organize around a commitment to the achievement of high standards by all students?
- What do schools look like when all the adults in the school are committed to the success of all the other adults?
- What do schools look like when they are results oriented?
- What do schools look like when all the stakeholders are committed to continuous improvement no matter how well they are already doing?

This book includes self-assessments, reviews of the literature, numerous practitioner examples, and tools and templates to answer these questions:

- What are the characteristics of cultures of learning? - What structures promote and support cultures for learning? - What knowledge, skills, and attitudes are needed to create, implement, and maintain cultures for learning? - What is best practice in professional learning? - How can schools best use data to inform practices? - What is best practice in teaching, learning, and leading?
